Gary's Tidbits.....

If you haven't already taken advantage of the great Austin weather lately and got outside to run, walk or ride your bike to get in shape – well time is a wasting. You're actually a bit behind. Check out the article "Ski Fitness: Workouts, Tips & Trends" that will provide some tips on how to start your regimen now. Check out the "30 Minute Ski Conditioning Workout" and "Post Ski Stretch Routine" videos.

if you want to avoid getting cold this season on the lifts check out the new outerwear. Take a look at the Skimag.com article entitled. "Gear Guide 2018: Women's Insulated Outerwear" and "Gear Guide 2018: Men's Insulated Outerwear."

Ok so what about the weather this ski season? The U.S. National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, otherwise known as NOAA has released their 2017-18 winter forecast. They issue a disclaimer that long-range forecasts (3-6 months) are rarely accurate. What NOAA's maps are telling us is that with the onset of La Niña winter will see much of the Pacific Northwest (PSW) and northern rockies with an above average chance of precipitation. The Climate Prediction Center is saying there is a good chance of La Niña developing early this winter. Check out these two website for more details: opensnow and Unofficial Networks. They have links to other sites embedded within the article.

We look forward to another GREAT year of providing travel and social opportunities for you and your family to enjoy!
